Caregiving groups share common ingredients.

Just as a recipe for a gourmet dish may call for several ingredients and require several steps in order to be table worthy, the recipe for developing a caring group into a “community” calls for ingredients of caring, sharing, trusting and being open with each other in order to truly become a “community.” Here are the core beliefs that caregiving groups share:

- We are a body of believers in the resurrected Christ.
- We are members and supporters of Lincolnshire.
- We have vision and mission statements that are the embodiment of the two great commands regarding love.
- We share verbally our beliefs and doubts surrounding our faith.
- We pray earnestly for each other and for direction.
- We forgive one another and ourselves when we falter.

These core ingredients will help establish a common beginning for further deepening our relationships with one another.

Craig Colvin

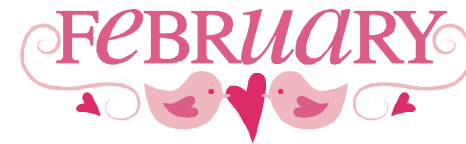

Dear friends:

We thank all of you sincerely for the phone calls, hospital visits, cards, food, and prayers for Dick's recovery from his lung surgery. One can never really appreciate the caring and love that this brings and how much it really does boost one's morale when alone in the hospital. These special acts of kindness bring their own special kind of healing. Thank you so much for thinking of him and me. So fortunate we are for the Lincolnshire church family.

In prayer and in gratitude...
Dick and Linda Robbins

His compassions fail not.
They are new every morning; great is his faithfulness.
